The Boeing Company is the latest, and egregious, example of breaches of ESG principles or standards by a supposed "Blue Chip" major industrial public company. This case study will examine the catastrophic safety failures due to violations of safety and environmental controls that resulted in hundreds of lost lives, the retaliation against whistleblowers attempting to remedy those violations and the tens of billions of dollars of shareholder investment that have been lost as a result. Boeing is a stark example to investors to remain ever vigilant in holding companies in their portfolios to high standards of conduct and stewardship.
